TITOLO DELLA TESI : The Constitutionalisation of Platform Governance: A Societal Critique of Digital Constitutionalism

ABSTRACT DELLA TESI :

The thesis investigates the expansion of sovereigntist and universalist discourses in the regulation of platform governance, particularly through the concept of digital constitutionalism. While the global multistakeholder approach of internet governance has been met with scepticism among academics and policy-makers, the research explores a societal approach to constitutionalism to preserve digital self-determination at the individual and collective levels, promoting democratic governance for the governance of – and by – platforms. Thus, it explores the interoperability of constitutionalism as a mode/technique of democratic politics in multiple social environments. With a strong commitment to pursue digital regulation as a transnational and global issue that should not reduce perspectives in accordance with a particular region's market size/influence, it aims to reassert the importance of diverse perspectives regarding internet governance
